The Home of a Friend By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER

I rang the bell as usual. The way the door was opened, the whispering voice of the servant and the look of sadness upon his countenance, made me feel that something terrible had happened. I entered upon tip-toes-I did not know why; I opened mouth and eyes in expectation . "He died this morning," whispered the man at the Leaving, I compared my entering there with The Funeral Church. A reception room, designed by a master architect and fitted with works of art of this and foreign lands, relieves those who enter heavy laden.

A beautiful specimen of a "spiral palm" attracts their attention. The famous "cloisonne vases," the beautiful "Morley horses," two exquisite bronzes, an Aubusson tapestry, an art weaving of the seventeenth century, are diverting sombre thoughts. Every one is intressed by the entire omission of anything and everything suggestive of death or sorrow.

This was strongly impressed upon me when I heard a lady say to Mr. Frank E. Campbell, founder-proprietor of The Funeral Church: "Such kindness helps so much when one is in trouble."

Having been introduced, she spoke to me enthusiastically about The Funeral Church and the services rendered by those connected therewith. While, parting, she said:

"There was none of the coldness one always feels in an undertaking establishment. It seemed more like the home of a friend."

That last sentence made such an impression upon me that I forgot to speak. Or else I would have explained to her that The Funeral Church is not an "undertaking establishment," that Frank E. Campbell is not a mere "undertaker." That on the contrary the sorrow-stricken finds in Mr. Campbell and The Funeral Church the "home of a friend" and "a friend of the homeless."
